COMMUNICATIONS

From the Editors

In our continuing program of up-grading the publication of Nestor, we are changing the bibliographic program used to generate the bibliographic entries. This will enable more accurate listings in the print edition of the monthly issues of Nestor, and should facilitate faster conversion of the bibliographic files for uploading to the searchable on-line Nestor database. The editors of Nestor thank subscribers and readers for their patience during this conversion.

Electronic News and Notices

The Collaboratory for GIS and Mediterranean Archaeology (CGMA) has announced the release of the Mediterranean Archaeology GIS (MAGIS), an on-line, browser-based GIS inventory of completed and ongoing regional archaeological surveys in the greater Mediterranean area at <http://cgma.depauw.edu/MAGIS>. MAGIS contains survey metadata, including project name, researchers, methodologies, geographic coordinates, chronological coverage, special studies (e.g., lithics or epigraphy), bibliography, and the environmental characteristics of the study areas. The database can be searched spatially using an interactive map or by queries based on specific fields in the database. Comments and suggestions may be sent to cgma@depauw.edu. Researchers responsible for survey projects are asked to check, correct and expand the information about their project(s); metadata for projects not yet listed can be entered through the Data Entry page and will be stored in a holding database until vetted and released to the online database by CGMA personnel. An extensive on-line help file explains how to navigate and use the site, as well as precise definitions of the metadata categories.
